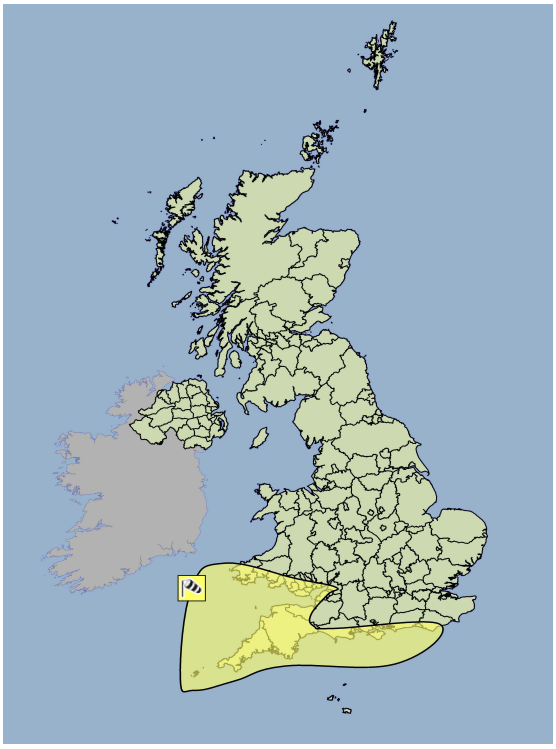
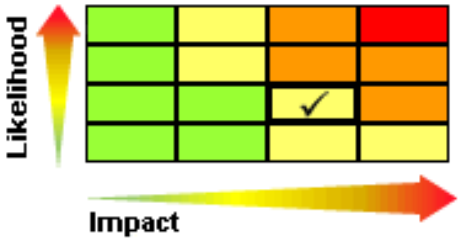
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure is expected to be over the UK on Monday with some very strong winds around its southern flank, these lying across parts of southwest and south England and south Wales. The winds are likely to be very gusty at times, particularly around showers running into these areas. In addition to this some very large waves are expected, particularly along the north coast of Cornwall.

There remains some uncertainty in the track and peak strength of the strongest winds and so this alert is likely to be updated in the coming days.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Wind

Valid from 03:00 on Mon, 08th Feb 2016 until 18:00 on Mon, 08th Feb 2016

An area of very strong winds is likely across parts of southwest and southern England, in particular the coasts of Cornwall, as well as south Wales on Monday morning before winds gradually ease during the afternoon and evening.

Gusts of 60-70 mph are possible, particularly in association with heavy showers running across the area, with 80 mph gusts possible in exposed coastal districts. Some very large waves are also likely along the north coast of Cornwall in particular.

Please be aware of the potential for disruption to travel as well as localised damage to structures and interruption of power supplies.

This is an update to the alert issued on Friday to broaden the area affected by the strong winds into south Wales, the Bristol Channel and further along the south coast. This also moves into the medium impact column.
